Richard H. Mansfield (1888-1971), was born in Southeast Washington, the son of Philip Mansfield, a District policeman, and Alice Buckley Mansfield. After graduating from Business High School, he worked as an apprentice machinist at the Washington Navy Yard until 1907. While employed at the Navy Yard he took drawing classes at the Corcoran School of Art. From 1907 to 1911, he appeared in vaudeville as a cartoonist. In 1911, after marriage to Lillian Magruder, he joined the District police force as a bicycle patrolman. He later became a motorcycle officer. In 1921, he left the police force to become an editorial cartoonist for the Washington Times. He returned to the District police the following year. In 1932, he became captain of the 9th precinct. While serving in this position, he launched a children's traffic safety campaign and began giving presentations, or "chalk talks," on safety in area schools, which utilized his skills as a cartoonist and background as an entertainer. In 1941, he was named chief of the detective bureau. In 1943, after a heart attack, he retired from the police force.

After his retirement, Mansfield was given the honorary title of "inspector." In 1943, he took over as director of a traffic safety program sponsored by the Washington Star, which allowed him to continue his "chalks talks" at District and suburban schools. He organized a club called the "Safety Carefuliers" which enjoyed a large membership. In 1949, he began appearing on local television. He gave his last "chalk talk" in 1970. Mansfield was well-known figure to children growing up in the Washington area from the 1930s through the 1960s.

From 1926 to November 1958, Mansfield was a cartoonist for the Washington Star, drawing the "Those Were the Happy Days" cartoon series, a reminiscence of Washington life in bygone days. Mansfield won the Daughters of the American Revolution Award of Merit in 1956, and the Cosmopolitan Club's Distinguished Service Medal in 1959. Mansfield, who lived in Cheverly, Maryland from the 1930s onward, died in 1971.
